Harvard University's Tozzer Anthropology Library – the nation's oldest anthropology library – renovated and expanded to become a collaborative learning space. Custom-engineered windows and curtainwall were set in a staggered pattern throughout the brick- and copper-clad exterior, and installed as a sloped system to create a naturally illuminated interior light well.

Along with natural light and views, recycled materials and durable finishes, plus energy efficient and environmentally sound design, contributed to the project earning LEED® Gold certification.
